The Clearinghouse produces the Maternal and Child Health Publications Catalog annually to announce the availability of selected maternal and child health professional and patient education materials produced or funded in whole or in part by HRSA's MCHB.

In addition to publications for professionals, the Clearinghouse offers patient education materials in English and in the following other languages: Cambodian, Chinese, Haitian Creole, Korean, Laotian, Samoan, Spanish, Tagalog, Thai and Vietnamese.

The Maternal and Child Health Bureau provides leadership to both the public and private sectors in building the structure for health care services delivery to all mothers and children in the Nation. Its principal statutory responsibility, administering the Maternal and Child Health Services Block Grant, was originally enacted in 1935 as Title V of the Social Security Act. An important Bureau responsibility is to assist low-income or isolated populations who would otherwise have limited access to care.

The majority of the publications in this catalog were developed through program initiatives funded by MCHB discretionary grant programs, including Special Projects of Regional and National Significance (SPRANS); Community Integrated Service Systems (CISS); Emergency Medical Services for Children (EMSC); and Grants for Coordinated HIV Services and Access to Research for Children, Youth, Women and Families.

Through the National Center for Education in Maternal and Child Health (NCEMCH) and its National Maternal and Child Health Clearinghouse (NMCHC), the Bureau disseminates state-of-the-art information on maternal and child health.

NCEMCH is funded by MCHB to provide information resources and services to health professionals, policy makers, program planners, educators, researchers and the public. The National Center maintains a reference collection of MCHB program materials; produces publications on maternal and child health topics; and provides technical assistance in educational resource development, program planning and topical research.

Affiliated with the Graduate Public Policy Program at Georgetown University, NCEMCH offers information services in the areas of adolescent health; child health and development; children with special health needs; women's health; injury and violence prevention; nutrition; public health programs and services; and health systems. Information specialists respond to the needs of nearly 3,000 requesters per year. Types of resources available include:

- Lists of projects funded by the Maternal and Child Health Bureau that focus on a specific topic;
- Bibliographies of materials held in the NCEMCH Reference Collection, including Federal, State and local government publications; voluntary and professional organizations; and MCHB grantees;
- Referrals to parent and/or professional organizations that focus on specific illnesses or maternal and child health subjects.
